

A community anti-poverty education initiative

To close the achievement gap for Latino students in San Francisco's Mission District, more than 15 partners agreed to a common agenda and shared measurement.

Started in 2013, MPN is a cradle-to-career continuum of wraparound services to strengthen families and students.

KEY RESULTS

Based on the theory that economic stability for families will lead to improved outcomes in school, the Mission Promise Neighborhood (MPN) two-generation approach serves families at nine K-12 schools, three early learning centers and 13 family child care providers connecting families to services, supporting students and guardians in schools, and using Results-Based Accountability to define and measure outcomes.

COVID-19 Results

The Mission District's Latino community disproportionately suffered the financial and health-related effects of the COVID-19 pandemic. Many residents live in overcrowded residences due to high housing costs, and/or work in industries with heightened risk of exposure to the coronavirus. In addition to opening up testing sites at the Mission Neighborhood Health Clinic and the Latino Task Force hub, our partners collaborated to provide the most immediate needs to address housing, food and income insecurity, in addition to educational support to bridge the gap for distance learning. As a backbone agency, MEDA quickly restructured its services into three "action" teams which provided the necessary reallocation of staff capacity from Family Success Coaches to deliver critical income. housing and small business supports.

- Access to resources, testing and financial assistance. We hosted 19,917 client sessions in 2020 and the demand for public health, financial and food resources remains high.
- Housing support. Family Success Coaches have been assisting clients in completing 1,122 applications for affordable housing.
 Family Success Coaches support clients with private, state and city rental relief funds.
- Distance learning. We knew the challenges that at-home learning would present: Many of our parent clients have struggled with digital literacy or English fluency to navigate Zoom education. A client survey reported that 42% of our families were using a tablet or smartphone as their best computing device.

10 YEARS OF PROMISES KEPT

The phenomenally swift pivot of our 15 agencies to provide a clear crisis response for thousands of families during this pandemic was in fact the result of a deep collaboration and vision alignment that has been nurtured for 10 years. MPN's approach is centered around the concept of collective impact — a structured way of bringing people and agencies together to achieve lasting social change. Embedded in the costs of a collective impact models are a few key elements: 1) a strong backbone agency; 2) equitably paying partners for their time to collaborate, offer their expertise and resources as well as thought leadership and active engagement; and, 3) a unified set of key metrics and outcomes for the collective to measure progress for families and children. As such, MPN has been able to sustain its critical work in the community through a shared fundraising and policy platform to educate and engage federal, state, local agencies and private philanthropy on the transformative impact of investing in collective impact initiatives like MPN. Catalytic, multi-year investments offering flexible funding terms are what have allowed MPN as a whole to flourish — and to adapt programming and service delivery to meet the needs of the community over the course of a decade.

MEDA has successfully maintained the MPN initiative beyond the initial five-year $30M federal grant cycle — receiving (two) two-year extension grants in both 2018 and 2021. Despite securing those renewals, MPN has actively planned its funding transition since that time, focusing on securing longer-term federal appropriations, state, local and private philanthropic support. During this pandemic, the importance of aligned strategies between the City, school district and the community have been highlighted in the civic infrastructure that MPN provides.
